Annex 1

Code of Ethics for Coaches

Code of Ethics for Coaches is based on the principles of fair play in sports. The ethical requirements of coaches apply to all levels of skills and competences, to the coaches working in fitness as well as in competitive sports.

The coach must behave ethically in their work, guided by the following principles:

- The coach must respect human rights all the trainees have equal rights, and they should not be discriminated against on grounds of sex, race, color, language, religion, politics or other opinion, national or social origin, belonging to a national minority, origin, ancestry, or any other social condition.
- The coach must respect the dignity of all trainees, to recognize the contributions of everyone, and the right to be verbally, physically and sexually unabused and unexploited.
- The coach must ensure the safety and suitability of sporting conditions and take into account the age, abilities, and skills of the trainees. The coach must monitor that particularly close in the case of young people and beginners.
- The coach must know and respect the letter and spirit of competition rules both in training and in competitions, ensuring equal opportunities and competition conditions for all athletes.
- The coach must respect the judges and recognize their role in the fair and proper conduct of the competition.
- The job of the coach is to manage and influence the sporty behavior and performance of trainees and at the same time encourage them to decide independently and take responsibility for their decisions, behavior and performance.
- The coach must manage the prevention activities against the use of doping and prohibited methods, to explain to the trainees consistently the adverse effects of doping substances and banned methods.
- The coach must admit that all coaches have an equal right to expect success from their trainees in the competitions held according to rules. Comments, suggestions, and criticisms should be submitted directly to the relevant people and their need to be addressed privately, not in public.
- The coach is not to openly or covertly change the training plans of the athlete entrusted to him or her as a team coach or to force upon the athlete his or her training methodology, not involving the athlete's current coach.
- The coach must recognize the right of all trainees to strive towards the realization of their abilities, even if it would lead to changes in cooperation with the current coach. In such cases, the coach must ensure that the involvement of another coach, or the transition of the trainee to another coach will be discussed thoroughly with the trainee and the change is in the interests of the trainee.

- The coach must have recognized professional skills. The coach understands that development of professional skills means continuous learning and acquisition of experience through work. The task of the coach is to share knowledge and skills.
- The coach must respect professional integrity and always be dignified by appearance and behavior. The coach shall not smoke in the presence of trainees. The coach must be sober during trainings and must not, before work or during work use, alcohol or other psychotropic substances. Also, outside the training and competition environment, the trainer must behave properly and to be an example to the trainees and to colleagues.
- The coach must establish good cooperation with all persons and institutions, on which the development of his or her trainees may depend on, including other coaches, sports scientists, doctors, their sports association and other sports organizations.
